

2017 in Review: San Antonio biotech companies score big wins

In early December, StemBioSys Inc. locked in a deal that further expands its international footprint. The San Antonio-based biotech struck an agreement with a British company, Caltag Medsystems Ltd., that will market and distribute its cell products in the United Kingdom and Western Europe.

“This gives us a partner in Europe that has a big presence in multiple countries,” StemBioSys CEO Bob Hutchens said. “Their aggressiveness in executing the agreement ... gives us a great deal of comfort that they will really help us build a meaningful presence with European researchers.”
